

How might we encourage communication between homeless shelters and domestic violence shelters?

- Use of technology and developing apps for them specifically
- Use the technology that is already in these shelters to connect people to the resources they need

How might we educate the community to encourage changes in policy?

- Educational videos
- Advertising in different forms of media
- Posters
- Educating people to know what current policies are
- Letting people know what changes are being proposed

How might we educate the community to encourage changes in cultural and social norms?

- Educational videos
- Advertising in different forms of media
- Posters
- Changing entertainment media (to stop glorifying DV/SA)
- Encouraging communities to hold each other accountable

How might we educate the community to encourage changes in resources for community and law enforcement?

- Educating people to know what current policies are
- Introducing a public forum for police
- Asking police officers to say what resources they have
- Having police officers bring in the statistics for cases that they dismiss, in an open public way

How might we work with law enforcement to improve their practices?

- Letting the public give feedback on law enforcement practices and policies
- Call and response; police should show public what they are doing

How might we improve our understanding of how marginalized communities deal with DV/SA and interact with law enforcement?

- Creating a public space where people in marginalized communities (and/or advocates) can speak up

How might we use technology to reach multiple communities?

- Give the public access to police statistics over an app
- Use the app for public feedback (a public forum)